The Ultimate Employee Handbook Template for Malaysian Employers

INTRODUCTION

Employee handbooks are an essential part of any company's employment policies and guidelines. In Malaysia, most employee handbooks are written to provide guidance and set expectations for employees to comply with. They contain information about the company profile, legal practices, and others. When conflicts arise, the employee handbook can serve as a reference to provide a solution to the situation.

While companies in Malaysia are not legally required to furnish employee handbooks, it is prudent to have one to serve as a reference for employees to use when they have questions about company policies, procedures, and guidelines. This can save time and resources for both employees and employers.

Handbooks also outline the company's policies and expectations, and when followed, they create a positive and productive work environment. They help employees understand their rights and responsibilities, which ultimately leads to better job performance and satisfaction.

Furthermore, employee handbooks can also be used to promote company culture and values. By including information about the company's mission statement, values, and goals, employers can communicate to employees what is important to the company while fostering a sense of unity and common purpose among employees.

As employers — particularly at organisations within the SME segment — it can be difficult to find the time/resources to create an employee handbook for your company. That is why we are here — to support you while you run your business.

To get the most out of the Employee Handbook Template by altHR, feel free to add, amend, or remove items as you see fit for your company!
